Good afternoon. Freedom of speech is wonderful, unless it promotes hate or other behaviour that is detrimental to a society. Media outlets have exploited our freedom of speech clause. Although the First Amendment protects free speech, the Ninth Amendment clearly states the enumerated rights are not meant to disparage others of theirs. Bad music hurts marginalized populations. We need to stop violence and find a way to educate young people that are not in school. To stop violence the FCC could strengthen regulations to what record companies and general radio bases can promote. Limiting music that is detrimental to all of society can improve the general health of our population. I understand the FCC is considering lowering the standards even more right now, we as Americans can not let our guard down.

America has created many outstanding songs, yet a few areas could use improvement. Some of our most scary works are not mainstream media, yet widely available by websites often that promote hate. Establishing a regulation limiting production and distribution of music that contains speech that promotes hates crimes can stop hate crimes. Establishing a regulation limiting production and distribution of music that contains violence can limit violence. To avoid banning music that promotes cultural genocide, artists could republish songs after rewriting songs that contain speech that promotes cultural genocide, and the FCC can severely limit the number of songs radio stations and producers can promote of certain themes, ie drinking or violence.

Young men and women are very vulnerable to music's influence. Most young people are influenced from the music they listen to. Many people, especially young people that do not have parents are raised by the society we create. Parents are at work trying to provide medicine, shelter, and food, leaving children to learn from the radio and YouTube. Young people even if they might not like music might fear speaking out for fear they might be alienated. Music content for general radio stations, record companies, and major media outlets needs stronger protection. The First Amendment matters, yet the 9th Amendment matters too. According to Congress.gov, "The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people" (1) meaning hate speech is a violation of others right of protection and right to religious freedom. If there is an unproportionate number of songs targeting regions or ethnicities, it effects American culture and violates the Civil Rights Act and the 9th Amendment. The United States and many nations would be healthier creating stronger guidelines regarding violence, crime, drinking, and drugs from major media outlets to improve society.

Country music has a non-proportionate number of songs regarding drinking. Hip Hop has a non-proportionate number of songs regarding clubs. Record companies would do more good promoting songs about school, integration, and reaching the UN Sustainable Development Goals than unintentionally targeting youth promoting clubs over schools and drinking as a standard coping mechanism. Free Audiobook websites would benefit more by not promoting books with racist stereotypes, especially being this targets poor often uneducated people with limited options for entertainment within a budget.

At the apartment where I live, on a Friday night there were about 40 people, with about 14 children ages 1 to 14. They were loudly playing "Pop That Puy" in front of the children. The young parents did not stand up, and the incident continued until the police intervention. The police relations are fragile in the area, if we have greater FCC protections for the music, the police might build healthier relations.

I was at a pawn shop and a woman with three children entered the store. They had music playing. It was “Color Me Badd - I Wanna Sex You Up”. The song made reference to sexual relations. The next song also was very sexual. I saw the family leaving, the oldest boy, might have been 13, was holding his genitalia. This occurs every day and disproportionately effects poorer communities that can not afford after school programs and often victims of peer pressure.

The United States is a beacon of light and inspiration. The United States performs a balancing act to protect everyone regarding regulations and freedom. Future generations have a right to hear a very wide range of viewpoints (freedom of speech 1st amendment) and elected government agents have a duty to protect (9th amendment, Civil Rights Act, etc…). To reach the UN Sustainable Development Goals, record companies might do well to not produce hate speech, and detrimental music to promote a kinder, gentler world. Statistically speaking, if there are certain racial demographics that have musically unhealthy cultural norms, a firm guidance from elected, educated members of our FCC to adjust the path of humanity could create a kinder gentler world.

Creating a Board of Doctors regarding content approval might help prevent misogyny, racism, unhealthy sexual music, and unhealthy music about drug use and other substances. It would be wonderful if the FCC created new rules regarding protections. If a Board of Doctors oversaw approval of music Assigning members of our FCC to research the statistics for music that unintentionally stereotypes and effects marginalized and uneducated communities can provide insight understanding how some cultures are crippled, and establishing new guidelines regarding percentages of music per day that radio stations can play that are unhealthy along with promoting larger percentages regarding healthier music and timeline to phase out production and distribution of destructive music could create positive changes in America and many nations. Declining a Copy Right until music lyrics are not promoting any sick behavior and using FCC to deny airtime to any song infringing on the 9th Amendment (after review from doctor board or similar) could protect many people.
